

THE MORNING POST.

FRIDAY, MARCH 7, 1834.

Col. G. T. Winthrop's remarks in the House of Representatives, upon the U. States Bank Resolutions, will be found on the First Page.

The unusual pressure in the matter market, compels us to parade in solid columns this morning.

STENOGRAPHIC GLIMPSES OF CONGRESS.

LXXVIII.

Washington, March 1, 1834.—Both Houses adjourned yesterday over to Monday, not wishing to be too parsimonious of their time, as they have the spring and summer before them.

The first of March, as I predicted a week since, is really a Spring day—and every body in the city sallied forth to make calls, leave cards, reciprocate civilities, or exchange salutations.

You will have learnt, ere this, that Mr Leigh has been elected to the Senate of the U. S. in place of Mr Rives, for the balance of the term, one year. I did not learn this till after I had despatched my letter last evening, and when it was too late for a Postscript. Mr Leigh must be a great man indeed to fill Mr Rives' place. As the opposition have already the majority, (against the Government—though I doubt whether they have in favor of the Bank, it being well known that many of them deny the constitutionality of a National Bank,) it matters very little, whether there is one more or less added to their number.—They may exercise their privilege, on Executive nominations, of acting the dog in the manger; but, like a tailor with half a pair of shears, they will not be able to cut out any work either for themselves, or for Nick either. The Senate can originate nothing that will ever be able to reach the honor of a veto.

Every body knows, or soon will know, that the present design of the opposition is to discredit and prostrate the State Banks. They were routed gallantly yesterday on this subject. Mr Poindexter's fabulous facts, about the Secretary of the Treasury drawing a draft of "more than a million" on the Planters' Bank of Natchez, to be transferred to New York to sustain the "failing Banks" of the Safety Fund System, were met face to face by the knightly Senator from Georgia, and branded with falsehood. Thus the base coin of the opposition is nailed to the counter.

I think you may safely take the testimony of the Courier and Enquirer on this subject, though that press is favorable to the Bank. And if it should contain any thing touching the courage and chivalry of the redoubtable Senator from Mississippi, you may take its testimony as conclusive on the point.

Rely on it, Mr Poindexter will not act the part of bully or bravo for the opposition again this session. They found it pretty difficult to "rescue" him yesterday; and he will take pretty good care they shall have no occasion to come to his rescue again.

It was confidently asserted, and unhesitatingly believed, that Mr Poindexter sent a challenge to Mr Forsyth, which was promptly accepted—but of the truth of this, I have no means of ascertaining; nor do I believe it.

I believe that the rumor originated with Poindexter's friends; and, to make it believed, they added, that the challenge was accepted. And to make the matter still more sublimely important, they say he is a "dead shot."—Poh! those who saw him yesterday, trembling in every tone, and limb, and nerve, would have concluded that it was much safer to be his antagonist, than his second. Why! the man would most certainly miss every thing he aimed at.

Mr Forsyth, after the Senate adjourned to go into secret session, left it, and went to his lodgings. I understood: Mr Poindexter remained. After the secret business had been dispatched, Dr Chambers, I understand, opened the melancholy subject of Senatorial veracity, by a reference to certain authorities on the subject of rules and orders in the House of Commons, which undertook to settle all cases of logomachy. The Sergeant at Arms was dispatched with a summons from the Senate, to call Mr Forsyth before them. The gentleman obeyed—and was seen marching with all his characteristic coolness towards the Capitol, at a late hour in the afternoon.

When he presented himself, Mr Clay, I understand, insinuated very broadly, that Mr Poindexter had not, in a sufficiently courteous manner, demanded of Mr Forsyth, "whether he intended to impeach his veracity on matters of fact within his (P's) own knowledge." And Mr P. taking Mr Clay's cue, did that thing, (i. e. "demanded") I understand, in a very courteous and becoming manner. Mr Forsyth, without making any categorical answer, argued it in this wise:—"No one could suppose that the Senator from Mississippi could know of his own knowledge, what the amount of the Secretary's draft was; for he had not sent any, but only given notice; and nobody could suppose that the Senator could know of his own knowledge, where the funds were to be sent; and nobody could suppose, that the Senator of his own knowledge, could know that the funds were to aid the failing Banks in New York," &c. And in the same manner, though more civilly, I dare say, he went through the whole chapter of the fabled facts. And thus, without making any more distinction about "veracity" upon personal knowledge, or "veracity" upon hearsay, the honorable Senator took his seat.

All this was done, I understand, with the same kind of nonchalance, as the Connecticut deacon read the chapter in Chronicles, on generations, of a Saturday night:—"And Ner begat Kish; and Kish [nodding] begat Saul; and [growing more drowsy] Saul begat [yawning] Jonathan; and [yawning out, "heigho!"] so they begat one another to the end of the chapter."

As soon as Mr Forsyth had resumed his seat, at his usual angle of 45 degrees, Mr Poindexter's special friend moved instantly that this (whatever you may call it) be considered as full accord and satisfaction to Mr Poindexter's wounded veracity, and be entered of record on the Journal of the Senate.

Most certainly the gentleman's honor could not have been very craving, to be satisfied with the few crumbs of comfort that dropped from Mr Forsyth's sarcastic lips; Ann More, who lived upon nothing, would have starved upon such diet.

Surely the gentleman's exasperated and wounded veracity is the most reasonable, and plausible, and generous, and forgiving veracity that ever was, to be satisfied with so little satisfaction; and moreover, very wonderful for its recuperative energies; it is like the snake, of which an account was published not long since in New York, that was cut in two by some ironical stroke; but his snakeship, clapping his severed parts together, restored his integrity, and crawled off! Nevertheless, Poindexter delivered the best speech on the Seminole question! REIS EFFENDI.

The inhabitants of the city of Bangor have commenced looking about them for a "practical business man" to officiate as Mayor.

The Mechanics are moving.—We are rejoiced to see the Mechanics of Boston, organizing Societies for their mutual advantage. They are as intelligent and useful a portion of the community as exists in it, but owing to their negligence they have not, heretofore, exercised that influence among their fellow citizens which properly belongs to them. Let them rally and unite—move together in good faith, dismissing all unworthy jealousies, and they will soon occupy that elevated position which their talents, pure character, and numerical strength, justly entitle them to. We hope that the Printers will assume an active part in the good work.

"The deposit bank at Louisville, Ky. has struck a balance and returned the deposits to the United States Branch Bank in that place, and notified the Secretary of the Treasury, that he may draw on the branch for the balance. The present system does not seem to work very well; does it Mr Taney?"—Taunton Whig.

We have noticed a similar statement in several opposition papers, but have seen no mention of the fact in the Louisville papers, and hence infer that it is incorrect. A while since we saw quite a flourish in the opposition papers, of the stockholders of the Bank of Virginia, who were said to have rescinded their contract with the Treasury to receive the deposits, and many a good national gloried in the belief that the Bank of Virginia had given up the Treasury deposits. It was only a flourish, for effect—they never gave up the business, they receive the money, and now continue gladly to do the Treasury business and pay its drafts as usual.

"Gov. Wolf of Penn. recommends a forced loan on the banks of that State, in order to supply the deficiency in the Treasury."—Albany Advertiser.

This is precisely such a forced loan as the State of Massachusetts has just made of the banks in our city—and such as it makes upon them every year. However, as their charters were granted, both in Pennsylvania and this State, with the condition that the State should have a right to loans for certain amounts at a stated interest, we are unable to perceive the propriety of calling them forced loans. In this State the banks pay a tax of one per cent, annually, on their capital, and when the State takes a portion of it from them, on loan, it would seem but equitable that it refund the tax on the sum thus borrowed.

The Distress Memorial.—The Courier of yesterday, says there are seven thousand signers to the young men's "Solemn Protest." We have been informed that great numbers of them are minors; and that the runners went on board the numerous fishing vessels from Cape Cod, the South Shore, and elsewhere, now fitting out for the cod fishery, and also on board the coasting and other vessels in port, and obtained the names of sailors, who knew not what they signed, but were assured that if they signed the paper, money would become very plenty. Taking into view the great efforts made by the numerous and well drilled regulars of the Bank, it is surprising that they have done so little, and their failure must satisfy all candid men of the unpopularity of the Bank even here.

A "distress committee man."—While we were busily engaged at our desk yesterday, our attention was called to a large basket, covered with a cloth, which had been quietly deposited at our side by a boy, who was about to father its contents upon us, whether we would take them or no. Our curiosity, at this moment, was in no degree diminished by certain sounds which proceeded from the basket, and which might easily be construed either into the voice of a cat or a "young man." In answer to a rather hasty inquiry as to the contents of the basket, the boy replied, that he had understood we wanted a cat, and—it being in his line of business—he had ventured to bring us a supply, without waiting for a formal order. Not being in want ourselves, we advised the boy to offer puss's services to the "young men's distress committee"—to which place we had previously recommended our friend of the Central Courant, who advertised for one of the species, who would "not be above catching a mouse."

Attempted assault upon Mr Van Buren.—The Washington correspondent of the Pennsylvania, under date of the 28th ult. states, that as Mr Van Buren, accompanied by Messrs Woodbury and Cass, was retiring from a Ball, given in honor of the birth of Washington, on the Monday previous, a person employed in the Telegraph office, more intoxicated with party venom than with liquor, attempted to assault him, and was prevented from effecting his object by the bystanders, who promptly seized and held him off, while Mr Van Buren passed out without noticing him.

Stage Accident.—The mail stage from Boston, this morning, broke down, about three miles south of Billerica. It was loaded, we are told, with about half a ton of baggage, and eighteen passengers—none of whom were materially injured. The mail and passengers were brought into town in a wagon, a few minutes before one.—Lowell Journal.

If travellers would be a little more attentive in finding out, and a little more bold in demanding, their rights, we should hear less of accidents. The man who trusts himself upon a stage coach, carrying "eighteen passengers and half a ton of baggage," with the roads in their present state, runs more risk than we should like to encounter. While travelling two or three weeks since, we arrived at Lowell on our way to this city, and was there requested to mount the top of a coach, then bearing the weight of seventeen passengers and their baggage, to toil through the mud to Boston, at the rate of three miles an hour.—Our remonstrances against the imposition, brought us nothing but the insolence of the driver, who told us we must ride there, it at all; our reply was, that we should not travel in that way, and he accordingly drove off and left us. We then informed the agent that he must either furnish a proper conveyance to the city, or stand the hazard of a suit at law—he wisely chose the former, and furnished us with a carriage to the end of our journey, at an expense, to him, of some twelve or fifteen dollars.

The Legislature of Maine have been revising the militia system of that state. A bill has passed both branches providing for three annual trainings, an increase of the amount of the fine for non performance of military duty, and allowing the soldier fifty cents for each day he may be on duty.

The selectmen of Taunton have offered a reward of $300, for the apprehension of the persons who recently committed an atrocious outrage upon Mr Edward Phillips, Jr., of that place.

A sign.—The Examiner and the Moderator, two papers recently published at Washington, as the especial advocates of Messrs Webster and M'Lean, have been discontinued.

Gen. Isaac D. Bernard, a distinguished citizen of Pennsylvania, died at West Chester on the 19th ult.

THE REPORTER ABROAD.

[Wednesday.]

***** We reined up our nag, in the pleasant shoe-building town of L—, just in time to accept an invite to attend Dr B's lecture on Phrenology, in the Town Hall—to strengthen the attraction of the invitation, our friend, who regarded us, in consequence of our reply to the first intimation, as little short of a blasphemer of the mysteries of phrenology, he added that there would be about two hundred ladies present. Now, though we had been travelling all day, we had not been blessed with the beams of a single bright eye. In fact, the soft, but not velvet condition of the roads, laid an embargo on all foot passengers; and we venture to say the fairest belles in the county busied themselves slipshod, on the infernal affairs of their castles; and did not dare to expose their dishabille, even by a side-glance through the window curtain. We were, of course, then, in an excellent temper, to be ensnared by the enchanting suggestion of our crafty crony; and without waiting to thank him, we inquired for the "local habitation and name" of the barber.—With what emphasis we put the query, may be inferred from the fact, that we had 36 hours' worth of the blackest beard in Christendom on our unrepaid chin. "The barber!" says our friend—"Why, there he goes, as fast as his legs can carry him, to the lecture."—"Frisettes and Phrenology," said we—"must we enter among a bevy of beauties with a beard long and thick enough to set up a brush manufactory, because your mower of muttons' chops has been seized with the phrenological furor?" "Even so," he replied—"and you have only to restrain your organ of self-esteem a little, tinkle up your destructiveness, and look as brave as the best of us upon a bad bargain." Thus counselled, and with "the black dishonor shining on our face," we entered the hall of science, and were led to a bench immediately above that in which the philosophical Figaro was seated. A villey and mischievous M. D. pointed out the object of our especial indignation, but seeing nothing in his appearance "to show cause why" he had not as good a right there as the rest of us, we determined to see if the lecture should contain any thing useful to a knight of the curling iron.

In about fifteen minutes, the hall was crowded with over four hundred persons; and owing to some sudden fit of caprice, the ladies posted themselves—for no gentleman would have presumed so to have placed them—on the opposite side of the hall, with the exception of a small foraging party, who occupied a redoubt on our left, from which they had dislodged a male battalion, and carried on a guerrilla warfare with the gentlemen in the centre of the hall. As we were stationed on an elevation, on their right flank on the second parallel in the rear, they could not bring even a wink to bear on our line, without being discovered. This would have been supportable if we could only have seen the fair enemies of our peace; but owing to the cribbing propensity of the oil contractor, whose "organ of acquisitiveness" was lord paramount of his affections, all the lamps in the hall did not afford light enough for a flea to jump by. Accustomed as we are to the bright glare of our city gas-lights, this deprivation went more to our heart than the singular taste of the learned laterer. Being unable to open any optical communication with the lovely ladies who frequent the far-famed "Lover's Leap," we were feign to follow their original example—and listen to the lecturer. Peradventure it were a ruse on the part of the lecturer to secure attention to his dead skulls, by preventing us from inspecting each other's living physiognomies. But it is questionable whether the advantage the fair phrenologists derived from their unintermitted attention to the lecture—excellent as it was—would be considered by them as a fair "value received," for the loss of the deep, burning gush of admiration which their charms must have elicited, had they been fully revealed to the rapt pupils bent on them. The lecture, in truth, deserved all the attention it received, which was the most profound we ever witnessed—it was actually amusing to see how devotedly the ladies listened to the doctor, as he skipped from organ to organ—now hissing on the occipital region—and anon ringing on the cerebellum. His style, delivery and enthusiasm, were well calculated to hold captive the attention of a popular audience; and above all, his sentiments were deeply imbued with a sound and manly morality, that "came home to men's business and bosoms." The doctor exhibited a cast of the head of Le Blanc, the murderer of the Sayre family, in which the organ of "destructiveness" was very fully developed, and also a cast of the murderer Teller's head, which bore a very great resemblance to Le Blanc's, and still more resembled, in its general contour, the head of the celebrated Marshal Davoust, who was distinguished above all the French Generals, for his destructiveness. We were also favored with a glance at the skull of old Wurmer, the crafty old German who bamboozled Bonaparte so long. The old warrior was well supplied with destructiveness, but still richer in "secretiveness."

When the lecturer reached "philoprogenitiveness," he became exceedingly eloquent, and very happy in his illustrations of the maternal love of offspring; but we fear the spirit of his remarks would evaporate in an attempt to transfer them to our sheet, and we are constrained, unwillingly, to pass the mover.—Not so, however, with one of his jokes—he told us of an old gentleman, who was more testy than a tethered mastiff, and who would allow no one to approach him, whether for hate or love, without a growl. But the organ of "philoprogenitiveness," was very fully developed in his cranium, and it was a well known fact that his son could never do anything amiss; Sir Testy even "permitted him to steal his tobacco, and put snuff in his grog, and pat him on the head for doing it." This is the ne plus ultra of parental forbearance. But leaving the lecturer, to take an observation of the auditors, who, among them all, was so deeply interested in the bunology of the head, as him who was a professional dealer in the article? To whom would the science be so practically useful? Should a customer place himself in his tonsorial chair, he has only to clap his finger on his large or small "destructiveness," to see whether he must shave him with fear and trembling, with a Rogers' best, or slash away with a cross-cut saw, like a sawyer working by the job, regardless of the consequences, and charge nothing for bleeding, telling his passive patient it was worth nippence to shave him, find it inconvenient to change a quarter, and invite him to call again and get his money's worth.—Should the organ be large he would of course reverse the rule, and assure the gentleman "would do as well another time." We might go through the whole catalogue of organs, and illustrate the utility of a knowledge of them to the worthy barber, but one unanswerable argument is as good as a thousand—*****

Police Court—Thursday.—A hairy mouth mortal, who has been cutting strange capers in our streets, for some days past, was charged with assaulting one of our citizens. He is said to be a Pole, and is thought to be deranged, and has greatly annoyed people by forcing them from the side walk, &c. On Thursday evening, in Park st., a watchman hailed him, and he seized a large stone, to throw at him, but in fact struck the complainant a severe blow in the arm. The court could get nothing out of him, but "I want some money"—"Do what you like with me, or pay me, and I'll go to sea." His name, being a "cluster of consonants," we cannot spell. So far as his name goes, he appears to be a genuine Pole; but that patriotic nation has a most villainous representative in him.—$3, and costs, and bonds $50 to keep the peace—and committed for the want thereof.

Susan Grisdale, (alias Lyndes, &c.) having been arrested in Philadelphia, by Mr Pierce, as an accomplice with Barnes in the robbery of the Eastern stage, last summer, was brought into court, but allowed further time for examination.

The reader's particular attention is requested, for the advertisement of DR PLANTOUX, which will be found in another column. Of the Doctor's worth and ability, we do not entertain a doubt, and we as fully believe in the system of treatment he has adopted, as in his great skill in administering, with success, the medicines his industry and research have enabled him to prepare. We anticipate a great demand for his "anaphrodisiac pills," and "phrenological rasps,"—while we are sure his "temper powders" cannot come amiss to our "distressed" friends of the National Republican party.

Mr Power takes a benefit to-night, at the Tremont Theatre. It is his last appearance—and all who wish to make 100 per cent. on their money, should be present. He sells fun in abundance to-night.

John Mills Brown—the veteran—shows a good hand for a benefit, at the Warren, this evening, viz:—"The Way to Get Married," and "The Bee Hive—or, Industry must Prosper." We are not in the habit of trumpeting for the old 'uns, but submit their cases to a jury of their friends, without argument.

To the Editor of the Boston Morning Post:—Sir—I wish, through the columns of your paper, to inform a certain noisy Auctioneer of Kilby street, a notorious hack politician, not to say an operator for the U. S. Bank, that his stealthy efforts to procure a meeting of the stockholders of the deposit Banks, in this city, Banks in which he has no interest, to give up the government deposits, will be as impotent as it is impudent. Z. March 6, 1834.

A most violent and disgraceful assault by the Lieutenant of the New Orleans City Guard, on the person of a gentleman, is related in the New Orleans Bee, in which the gentlemen were seriously cut in the head by this desperado, as we must call him from the facts detailed; it appears after inflicting the wound, his sword was taken from him and handed to the proprietor of the saloon of the American Theatre, the scene of outrage, and while in a moment of quiet, and efforts were making to check the flow of blood from the wound he had inflicted, he entered with his myrmidons the City Guard, who drawing their swords upon the citizens collected around rushed at them and wounded several, the Lieutenant again acting a conspicuous part.

The City Guard of New Orleans, say the papers of that place, are composed of persons belonging to all nations except the United States—ignorant, vicious, and unprincipled—armed to the teeth, and at any time ready to cut and wound those who may happen to excite their indignation.—N. Y. Star.

ADVERTISEMENT EXTRAORDINARY.—DOCTOR PLANTOUX from Paris, has the honor to announce his arrival in the metropolis of New England, where, he flatters himself, he has been preceded by the fame of his sanitary and salutary exploits. While less philosophical practitioners have devoted their whole attention to the treatment of not to the cure of corporeal maladies, Dr. Plantoux, unfettered by prejudice, and guided by the most liberal and reasonable principles, has soared into a sublime sphere, and successfully grappled with moral and intellectual infirmities: His phylacthan and anaphandun pills, a compound of arsenic and arsenic, rendered perfectly innocuous by chemical combination, will cure a sovereign and speedy remedy for the epidemic which, at this moment, so universally afflicts the circles of politics and fashion, and his phrenological raps will instantly remove those vicious excrescences which too frequently derange the pie mater and deform the cerebral configuration. The Doctor has not yet selected any permanent residence, but he may be heard at the Tremont House, every day, (Sundays excepted) from half past 2 until 4 P. M.
N. B. Temper powders, to allay excessive excitement.

NEW SYSTEM OF BOOK KEEPING.—BUCKLIN'S COUNTING HOUSE JOURNAL; or Book Keeping by Double Entry, Simplified; so that, by the use of several parallel vertical columns, for the entry of Bills Payable, Bills Receivable, Bills Paid and Bills Received, for the entry of Profit and Loss, and also of any other item or series of Business Transactions, all upon the same page or presented at one view of the Journal; any Merchant, Manufacturer, Mechanic, Farmer, or any other individual having occasion to keep Accounts, however extensive or complicated they may be, has always and at all times before him, without reference to any other book, the precise state of all his concerns; he is showing daily, and hourly whether he is gaining or losing by his business. The System explains itself, and may be put in practice by any person having the least acquaintance with Book-Keeping. For sale by OLIVER HOLMAN, 99 and 98 State street.
The following, (being one of our recommendations) has been received by Mr. J. M. Jones, Agent for the publisher of Bucklin's Counting House Journal.
Mr. J. M. Jones, Agents for Bucklin's Journal.
Sir—Having examined Bucklin's System of Book Keeping by double entry. I believe that for its simplicity and excellence, it is superior to any treatise on that subject, yet published, and recommended to every one to become acquainted with a system so decidedly beautiful and so really valuable.
Respectfully,
JOSHUA M. COLBURN, Accountant.
Boston, March 1, 1834.
As a "work of much merit and worthy of liberal patronage" it is recommended by the following gentlemen:—
